Community Resilience
Key components include connecting family members to necessary resources, providing family members and early childhood providers and educators with evidence-based training, and building community consensus on the importance of health outcomes on school readiness.

This work includes supporting nonprofit partners to provide high quality programming with a focus on early grade reading development, and supporting school districts by coordinating professional development resources and connecting them to community resources to drive attendance and engagement.

We can achieve this by aligning school activities that investigate NM-based career opportunities, expanding college and career preparation curricula, and developing an ecosystem of employers and adults to support students in exploring post-high school pathways.

The primary drivers to this goal are supporting all adults in exploring their post-secondary options and working with our partners to reduce institutional barriers to enrollment and educational success.

Though our Community Investment Fund, the Family Advocacy Center, and programs such as 211 and Tax Help NM, we can help build community resilience for our neighbors in North Central New Mexico.
